Warning Signs of Alzheimer's Disease

Think you or someone you know may have Alzheimer's disease? Let's take a look at the different signs of Alzheimer's.

Forgetfulness

Memory loss that affects day-to-day functioning isn't the same as missing a doctor's appointment or forgetting your neighbor's name. Someone with Alzheimer's disease can forget things often and not recall them later. They may forget about a meeting altogether and not remember that one was scheduled. The Alzheimer's sufferer is also more likely to forget things that happened recently.

Difficulty Performing Familiar Tasks

On occasion, you might turn on the wrong element on the stove and burn the empty pot sitting on the back burner. Or forget to serve the peas with the dinner you prepared. A person with Alzheimer's will have difficulty making dinner for the family altogether.

Problems with Language

From time to time, you may struggle for the correct word for something. You may even refer to the cat when you mean the dog. A person with Alzheimer's may have trouble remembering simple words altogether. They may not remember the word cat at all. They may substitute words in such a way that their sentences are difficult to make sense of.

Disorientation of Time and Place

You may forget why you have entered a room or what day of the week it is. You may have to retrace your steps to remember what you had planned to retrieve or think for a moment to recall that it's Wednesday. But the disorientation of time and place that affects a person with Alzheimer's is very different. A person with Alzheimer's may get lost in their neighborhood, even on their street and not recall how they happen to be there or how to get home.

Poor or Decreased Judgement

You may procrastinate about making an appointment to see the doctor for a nagging cough. Though you will eventually see the doctor if the cough persists. A person with Alzheimer's may not recognize that the cut on their foot has become infected and they need to see the doctor right away.

Problems with Abstract Thinking

You may not be good at math and dread dividing the bill between friends at a restaurant. A person with Alzheimer's disease may not be able to recognize what the numbers on the bill mean.

Misplacing Things

Misplacing items like your house key or your gloves happen to everyone. What is different for a person with Alzheimer's is that they will put things in inappropriate places. They may place the TV remote in the mailbox or the scissors in the washing machine.

Changes in Mood and Behavior

You may feel sad or blue on occasion. That is a normal part of life. But a person with Alzheimer's may have wild mood swings. They may appear calm one minute and furious the next and nothing has happened in between.

Changes in Personality

It is not uncommon for people's personalities to change a bit with age. Some people become crotchety. The changes in the personality of someone with Alzheimer's are often quite out of character. They may become fearful, confused or withdrawn. A person with Alzheimer's may become suspicious of a neighborhood child or scared of the UPS delivery person.

Loss of Initiative

It is quite normal to tire of social obligations, especially if your social calendar seems too full. A good night's sleep will likely restore your initiative. A person with Alzheimer's may become quite passive and require prompting to attend an event. If you see any signs of Alzheimer's in your loved ones, ensure you address it right away.
